

You talk. It writes. You read, hear, or print.

That is the whole program. Your story stays in your voice — your words, your humor, the way you tell a thing. Private dictation keeps audio on this computer. The first use downloads speech files, not your recording.

THE ADDRESS OF YOUR BOOK

Addam will write this here, or you copy it from his message.

Open it in Microsoft Edge (the blue e) or Google Chrome. Pick one. Always use that same program — if you switch, it can look like an empty book even though yours is still there. Click the star at the top so you never type this again.

The laptop is home

Sit at the Windows computer. That is where the book lives, where you write, and where you print. When Windows asks “Use your microphone?”, click Allow. You only have to do that once.

The iPhone is a pocket notebook

Do not write the book on the phone. If a story arrives away from the desk, open Voice Memos (the red waveform). Press the red circle, talk, press it again. Later, at the laptop: Talk → I have a recording.

How to write

- 1 Open your bookmark.
- 2 The first time, press Start my book. Put your name on the title page.
- 3 Press Talk → Start private dictation. Tell the story the way you would tell family.
- 4 Press I’m finished. Read what it heard. Fix any word that looks wrong — that is normal.
- 5 Press Write this into the book. It adds these words without changing earlier pages.
- 6 Whenever you like: Read (quiet page), Listen to the page, or Print. Use Backups to save a copy.

If something looks wrong

- Wrong words — fix them before you press Write this into the book.
- No microphone — press Type instead, or use a Voice Memo from the phone.
- Can’t find the book — same bookmark, same program (Edge or Chrome). Don’t use a private or “InPrivate” window.
